I feel the same for breakfast, no matter how early do I wake up I just don't feel like starting my day with cooking something. And am too so done with eggs and smoothies. This is really a great recipe to start a day with tasty and healthy ingredients. Along with the above ones, I will try 'em out adding banana too. Thanks :)	0	1		comment	0	0

I'm certain that reading and blogging do too. I just recently read your Dalrymple and thoroughly enjoyed it, he really brings the era to life with his immediacy and plotting skills, I forget sometimes that I'm reading "history". Keep finding your "me" time.	0	1		comment	0	0

It really means a lot coming from you. This topic is really close to my heart, especially with my dad being in the armed forces. I believe that there is no such thing as being fearless. Everyone is scared of something. We just react to fear in different ways. Fear either shuts you down or wakes you up!	0	1		comment	1151	1

I was thinking on the lines of a wolf in a sheep's skin. Could there be a sheep in a wolf's skin? I realized that all of us are sheep, soft and vulnerable but we turn into wolves when faced with adversity. And yes, you're right, we cannot thank our soldiers enough.  	0	1		comment	1152	1

All it takes is one courageous person to move a family and a generation towards progress. I used to teach a lady from Sierra Leone to read and write at my local library. This story is inspired by her.	0	1		comment	1270	1

I feel like you have the beginnings of an interesting character.  May I make a suggestion? The language and flow here are solid points, but there's a lot of telling--a bit more showing would have made this much stronger. Hope that's taken in the spirit it's offered in. :)	0	1		comment	0	0

Oh when we go shopping for outfits and I try out a dress, he&#39;ll go all over the place and bring more outfits and hand them to me in the changing room much to the discomfiture of the attendants ;) I tell you, I landed a great guy ;)  But I think I know what you&#39;re going through. I love the parallel drawings of the two characters, the descriptive details, and this standout line: &quot;The revolutionary in me was surfacing like a glistening sheet of oil over water&quot; Finally, this does what the best historical fiction does for me--makes me want to learn more of the history.	0	1		comment	0	0

Extra marks for the asides and the internal monologue of Garth. I did feel that the ending left things a bit unresolved though. The author's eloquence and the imagery he has created is why you should read this book. I was lost, transported to Saint Malo for days! As for Marie-Laure's blindness, he doesn't make you feel sorry for her. He shows us her strength of character, which is admirable, don't you think? 				es.blogspot.in/				Narrow Road to the Deep North' that gave me a hugely negative feeling. It was about adultery, war crimes, suffering in the most deplorable conditions of human existence, decline of respect for human life and those sorts of things, But the book had a heart to it. In the midst of all that darkness it told a story of love, hope and home to tell. The book will always remain one of the most unforgettable works of fiction I've read. About the 'The House We Grew Up In', well, the very use of 'House' instead of 'Home' throws all hopes in air. I would keep your cautions in mind and pick this one up for reading. Something about human failings always pulls me. It's a personal choice. Let me read it and find out if there is truly nothing worthy of taking back from its pages. Let me sign off with a humble appreciation of your article. Very nicely put.			6.1; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/51.0.2704.103 Safari/537.36

								you for leaving such a detailed comment. It's comments like these that make blogging worth the effort :) What an interesting observation that the author has used 'house' instead of home. I had not thought of it like that. But there might be a reason to that. I don't want to spoil it too much for you, but the mother's hoarding makes living in the house unbearable to her kids as they grow up. So the author probably looked at it from their perspective while naming the book. It's a good book plot-wise. But see, like 'Narrow Road..', I didn't feel anything towards the characters. I just didn't care what happened to them. And that is where this book fails. Or maybe it's just me. Let me know what you think of it. P.S. thanks also for the book recommendation ! I'll look for 'The Narrow Road'.			37.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/51.0.2704.84 Safari/537.36

PCT stands for Pacific Crest Trail. It's a treacherous and physically demanding trail which goes from Mexico to Canada! Thanks for asking. I should probably add the full form instead of the abbreviation.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/51.0.2704.103 Safari/537.36	comment	1594	1

My one quibble is using "something ordinary" instead of "some place ordinary." I think the latter would have been a better choice for setting up the far-from-ordinary place you described.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 6.1; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/51.0.2704.103 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

Your opening in particular was fantastic - your descriptions grounded us nicely in reality, and then you pulled the rug out from under our feet. I think it suffered a little from the word count requirement - the ending felt somewhat abrupt - but I think you could work this into a longer piece.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_5) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /51.0.2704.103 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

It's just easier to be all "OK, this is what you need to know." Especially when you're trying to hit a word limit. But doing it too much pulls your reader out of the story.	0	1	Jetpack by WordPress.com	comment	1683	0

When I read "electronic beeps" I thought for a second it was an alarm clock before the truth was revealed. I almost wonder whether there's a way to keep that sense that you might be waking up on an ordinary day going for a little longer before the reveal - but that might be unnecessary, it's great as it is.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 6.1; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/51.0.2704.103 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

Honestly, the raw emotions and tragic end aside, I felt it was a little overrated. Not trying to be insensitive to the family, but I really didn't get why it was on the NY Times Bestsellers list for so long. Reading is relative.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10.10; rv:48.0) Gecko/20100101 Firefox/48.0	comment	0	0

								yet vulnerable. Sometimes back, I had written in one of my posts "Don't chase women" (Or Don't chase men, as it would be while addressing the women), but rather chase something better like money, fame, a hobby or some passion like sports". The line had brought me brickbats from quite a few persons in my circle, even in my inner circle. I could fully understand their ire, knowing fully well they are victims of adolescence which is so magical yet is so confusing. Another thing which I took notice of, is that you chose a male adolescent to display vulnerability. This shows the male adolescents are as vulnerable as the female ones, to the times of adolescence, despite the widely perceived notion that the male gender is stronger in handling emotions. Feel nice, but concerned too, after reading the post.

I think the first sentence would be stronger if that second analogy were elsewhere. I hit the serpent scale and thought "but it was just a sine wave and I liked it being a sine wave." I think your premise for this story is a winner. I wanted more action though.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/53.0.2785.143 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

We sit back and observe, making up stories about places, people, and objects. As far as structure, I do like how you tie things together, with aging and time references.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 6.3; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/53.0.2785.143 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

Also the callback to joining the circus - it helped tie together that writerly tendency to make assumptions about people and fill in their histories. The line with the time machine felt a little too tidy - the last paragraph could be only that final sentence and it would still wrap up the story well.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; WOW64; rv:49.0) Gecko/20100101 Firefox/49.0	comment	0	0

So glad you did :) Thank you! I understand that the sine wave and the serpent analogies in the same paragraph were a lot to take in. I'll have to think about where else I can fit the serpent in. The buildings and the coffee shop mean nothing really, but the writer's mind connects three strangers as one person and imagines the progress of the line outside the shop to be his muse's progress in life.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; Win64; x64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/53.0.2785.143 Safari/537.36	comment	1968	1

I'd be interested in learning more about the mechanics of the "game" - do these beings create characters just to watch them go, like in an ant farm? Or do they have control over the actions of a character, as in an MMO? Can any player modify aspects of the environment (ie, in response to prayer), or just admins? Players need to keep their characters on a certain path, which is the human's life path. Although they can grant/reject prayers, they need to make sure that their humans do not stray from their path and that's how players level up. And the game throws up random surprises, something which players cannot control. Does that make sense? Took a risk this week with an "only-dialogue" post :) You know, I hadn't done the italics first, then I started to worry that people would get confused between the show host and the guest and I changed it. But I'm happy the tone worked! I wanted to write something light after all that super-challenge seriousness :)	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; Win64; x64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /53.0.2785.143 Safari/537.36	comment	1997	1

Try to view it as an adventure with your sweet daughter and it will lighten the load in your mind. You will both have more fun, too. And, in the end, you will be a stronger mom and woman because of it.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (iPhone; CPU iPhone OS 10_1_1 like Mac OS X) AppleWebKit/602.2.14 (KHTML, like Gecko) Version/10.0 Mobile/14B100 Safari/602.1	comment	0	0

I wasn't disappointed.  Husband tells me I tend to romanticize India. He is probably right. I think I took a mental snapshot when I first left and now the place exists for me, frozen in time. It's still home, and so is the US.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_5) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /54.0.2840.98 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

My mother used to bake cake over sand , Now my sister does that in her microwave oven/OTG. Am not into cooking or baking. Ma/Sis still don't own an oven , but baking cake at home is always festive , even now , when almost everyone owns a microwave and knows to bake. The whole preparation, precision , stirring and the smell ..!	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 6.1; WOW64) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/55.0.2883.87 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

								Will be my long range goal for this year. My other goals are and will be remodeling our second bedroom into our book library and combining the two closet into one and making into a walk in closet in master bedroom. Then as summer begins our driveway will rip apart and leveled out and the aluminum carport brought up put on foundation and closed in to make into a garage. Not much really going on to keep me busy but these are some goals are set aside for this year. Not much else to do I am not one to really set goals never really fall through with them. I feel what you are saying about writing. I haven't been successful in much of what I have written or epublished at this moment but I hope this year will be better for my writing than it has been in the pass. I really haven't gotten any response to any of my Blogs I written I still continue to write not going to give up. I love expressing my inter thoughts in words even if

To stand in line all day just to hand in some paper work. There is one such person and he came to earth knowing what lie ahead for all his friends, family and those that he loved with all he heart and he gave his life for us on the cross that very day he hung on it. If we could live our life as he did right to end as he did how great shall our joy be. Just as the old lady did with her pension check day after day standing waiting wondering if it had gone through yet. Like we all are doing here going through life journey day after day dealing with challenges we face until he calls us home. How great shall be our day when that comes. I really like your story really pulled me into what you had to say about the old lady and standing in line. I admit at first I had a hard time sympathizing with Linda as she's about to kill John, but her hatred for the other family felt very real and believable - overall you did a good job showing Linda's emotion throughout. I always have a tendency to worry if the reader is following, but you have trust in the reader and you gave the information before the question marks started to pile up. Firstly, you're writing a YA fiction, wow! I'm sure it would turn out awesome. I'd love to read it. I'm also an introvert and every time I get an invite from people who are not close to me, I keep hoping that either the event gets cancelled or I have a legitimate excuse to skip it. I wasn't sure who was writing the postcards, but I knew something wasn't right and finding out what was what propelled me through your story. The first section is a little disjointed from the other two. I think because it's a more general feeling than a specific moment. A collection of Samir's memories. It felt more detached even though the emotion is there. I think it's also more telling than showing ("I miss Ma. But...") and that stuck out because you did a fantastic job of showing in the other two segments (Ma's reaction to Samir's question of Baba's death especially).	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_6) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /59.0.3071.115 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

Interspersing Jack's thoughts and the dialogue between characters was a good way to keep the reader engaged and maintain the pace. That was a clever twist. This did feel like a larger story though, and it would be interesting to see the relationships fleshed out a little more. On a formatting note, when you copy-paste from outside of wordpress, it always seems to throw up some kind of nonsense. The formatting gremlins have appeared in this piece at a few points, making the text suddenly smaller. I've had similar issues too (I usually end up with too many spaces between paragraphs). So, it's always worth another read through.			(Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_12_6) AppleWebKit/603.3.8 (KHTML, like Gecko) Version/10.1.2 Safari/603.3.8

I was in SGP two years ago for a short vacation and noticed similar things. One of my close friends moved there a couple of years ago. I miss her crazy. Change is a funny thing for me. Sometimes I crave for it and when it actually happens, I feel all upset. If you happen to come to India,specifically Bangalore, do let me know. The way you equate the watering hole with social media is the perfect metaphor. I do have one criticism, since you posted the badge. :) It seems to me that the story was leading to a different moral. That is, the young zebra wasn't gloating, he was actually flat-out lying. If he had actually kicked the hyena, the moral would follow more cleanly. Or if the mother had called him out on the lie in public, that might have been a little closer.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_6) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /62.0.3202.94 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

I enjoyed reading it so much and could see Salman's face so clearly in my mind, as well as Susan's. I would say because Salman states earlier that his Ammi would slap her palm on her face to maybe use a different gesture when he feels embarrassed/frustrated later in the story. Susan's untucked shirt and dark circles really helped sell the way she was feeling about the breakup and being fired and buying the gas station sushi was such a good choice to show us how	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_10_5) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/63.0.3239.84 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

In that line, I understood the narrator. I liked him and wanted him to do great things. I wondered about the telling of the original meeting. It seems to me like most of the time, that’s the sort of interaction that one party doesn’t attach as much importance to. For Salman, it might not have been as special an interaction as Susan would've thought it was. 			mail.com	reading.wordpress.com		12:43:04	19:43:04	good detective story. I almost never solve them before all is revealed (clearly I'll never be a criminal mastermind). I liked the insertion of the back story. It helped me understand how Cithara's vision affected him so much. I do think the transition from that to the club is a bit abrupt. But the rest of it flows well. The ending is my favorite - that the vision suckered him in but he's smart enough to realize it.			(Windows NT 10.0; WOW64; Trident/7.0; rv:11.0) like Gecko

Some sentences are so good - "I almost wanted to admonish her for wearing lipstick " , "I fell into the whirlpools of her eyes" , "calamine to her scars". I think the story is crisp with just the right amount of detail. Thieves could steal diamonds from me pretty easily while I was hypnotized by a fantastic singer. I like how you left the end for the reader to draw conclusions, too. 								cutting the earlier scenes and the little bit about trying not to swear, and having Cithara show the MC images of his own daughter mixed with a young Cithara in his enraptured vision would cut some words and give you a little more room for pacing.

I loved the strong voice in this piece, it really hooked me in from the first line. You've shown aspects the character by the way he describes the appearance of the singer, as being too young to be wearing lipstick. I really like both the boy and the girl. They're doing what their families want, but they're still so "them" under it all. My favorite part is the reference to how the girl wants to wear jeans. Maybe because I am that girl.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; WOW64; Trident/7.0; rv:11.0) like Gecko	comment	0	0

I like the way you have both the boy and the girl doing what they're expected to do, but they haven't let go of who they are. The girl wanting to wear jeans instead of a saree and the boy doing what he can to impress the girl. The paragraph about prasadam is wonderful, and this line made me sit up a little: "It was sweet and nutty with hints of cardamom and rebellion." The first few paragraphs dragged a little for me, but I loved the description of the women and especially the girl.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_6) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/63.0.3239.132 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

I thought the moment between son and girl was very sweet. The similar sentence structure of the piece was lulling; it started to feel like a list of tasks toward the end. Maybe through a clause at the beginning of a few of the sentence to chop it up. Also, "Then he saw her" is a little cliché.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_6) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome/64.0.3282.186 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

And that it hadn't lost any of the personality of the person in life -- she still learned about her daughter. I really loved that she'd gotten so caught up in her daughter's life that she forgot the significance of the date. I like how you chose not to be straightforward about it; you drew the comparison by an abrupt paragraph switch and putting prickly pear into a clause describing the "her" of the story. Well done! I'm going to have to try that.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Macintosh; Intel Mac OS X 10_11_6) AppleWebKit/537.36 (KHTML, like Gecko) Chrome /70.0.3538.110 Safari/537.36	comment	0	0

								wreck, and that's when dad said, "NO MORE PETS for my pets!" I can so relate to your rat story, too. We live in a 'row' house, where there's a tiny courtyard which attracts rodents from all over. How many times did we run after them, run from them and come up ways to trap them and get rid of them! Uff! Thank you for this amusing piece...entertaining, I should say! :P

They didn't find a way into the house itself, but running about in the roof space and the gnawing noises kept me awake at night . The rat catcher finished them off and we blocked off the entrance hole in the outside wall next to a waste pipe. I still jump at every sound. Thanks, Hema.	0	1	Jetpack by WordPress.com	comment	2955	0

At first I thought it was another "dementia" story - nothing wrong with that, but the ending, does the elixir work or not, elevated it into something else. I wonder at the daughter's motivation - will she just steal all the exlir for herself and let her mother go? Intriguing. When reading, I wondered how it would look on the page if the calm, guiding voice moving through the chakras contrasted with the stream of consciousness by setting off one of them in italics. The set-up builds nicely, but the punch line/ending is a "so what." I want to be surprised and entertained, I want an ah-ha moment. "Can I just have two minutes to myself?" is every mother's lament and is as old as motherhood. If I were a teacher and writing in the margins, I would say dig deeper and add more sensory details. The constant blending of the sublime and the mundane, that's motherhood all right! 								regularly laughs at me for my nightmares about our children (who are grown, adult men that are both much bigger and stronger than me!). I love the way you transitioned from your nightmares, to your memories, to the fears for your daughter. For me, the transition from your fears to the surety of the safety net felt a little abrupt. There was almost a step missing here -- almost as if you'd written your own influence on your daughter's confidence out of the story.

Hubby had to be hospitalised and the virus was like the demon, haunting us day and night. Now that he is fine and life is getting back to normal, I am grateful that it all got over so soon. But I wonder how it must be for the countless out there who haven't had such a happy end to their story. When will this end! Your skincare routine is superior to mine. I use baby wipes to cleanse at night and I've used a moisturiser since I was eleven years old.  My face always felt tight after its morning wash, then one morning when walking to school, an older girl told me she used a moisturiser and advised me to do the same. Best thing I ever did and I've never missed. Today I use Nivea.	0	1	Mozilla/5.0 (Windows NT 10.0; Win64; x64; rv:109.0) Gecko/20100101 Firefox/111.0	comment	0	0
